CAN YOU SAVE CALAMITY JANE? OUI!

By Pamela McClintock & Stuart Kemp

A year ago, when the Natalie Portman Western Jane Got a Gun first was coming together at Cannes, no one could have predicted that one of last year's hottest scripts would unravel so spectacularly. The number of stars bolting have left all sides reeling — and that's on top of the departure of director Lynne Ramsay.

Jane finally has corralled its second leading man, Ewan McGregor, after losing Michael Fassbender, Jude Law and Bradley Cooper. The film is weeks from wrapping production in New Mexico. But the danger isn't over as Exclusive Media reintroduces the movie, with a dramatically different cast, to foreign buyers.

While most buyers have stuck with the project on a wait-and-see

Cannes Reacts to Jolie News

Hollywood and Cannes on Tuesday were buzzing about Angelina Jolie's revelation that she underwent a preventative double mastectomy after doctors found her to have a high risk of breast cancer. "I hope that other women can benefit from my experience," she wrote in a New York Times op-ed.

The news that the 37-year-old

A-listers increasingly are landing on the Croisette to reassure buyers about long-gestating projects By Stuart Kemp & Pamela McClintock

Martin Scorsese, Jennifer Lawrence, Justin Timberlake, Tim Burton, Jackie Chan, Fan Bingbing, Metallica's Lars Ulrich and Pele all will be in Cannes this year — but not just to stroll the red carpet at the Palais.

They're here to promote projects at the script stage — except for Lawrence — that are being shopped at the Marche du Film. The unprecedented star wattage for market titles indicates a whole new level of ambition in selling titles to foreign distributors and underscores the increasing difficulty of breaking through the noise. In previous years, there have been one-off events, but never on this scale. "Increasingly in the international and independent works, we have to set up projects as events," says IM Global's Stuart Ford, who is shopping Scorsese's next film Silence to buyers.

Today, Scorsese will meet with a large crowd of acquisitions executives during a Q&A with Ford asking the questions. Starring Andrew Garfield and Ken Watanabe, the movie is a longtime passion project for the director and is set in 17th century Japan.

Later tonight, Timberlake will rock one of the beachside party

Glen Basner's FilmNation will be showing footage of the film — whose tightly guarded plot is said to be about celebrity and excess — for the first time to international buyers who invested in Malick's latest endeavor.

Talk about worlds colliding: Singh, the producer considered the Harvey Weinstein of South Africa, just sold rights to Kite to The Weinstein Co.

JULIANNE MOORE
Awkward: Moore was attached to Imagine with Al Pacino, which is being shopped in Cannes, but her role recently went to Annette Bening.

SAMUEL L. JACKSON
POTUS with the most-us! The prolific actor again grabs early film market headlines: He's set to star in new actioner Big Game as the president of the United States.

"We're looking for three distinct types of movies broadly speaking. The first kind is British movies. Then we are looking for non-British projects which fall into two kinds: We look to buy smaller character- and director-led movies that are nicely packaged. We are also looking to buy what we call the bigger movies, the ones like The Hunger Games or Ender's Game, which have a strong recognizable cast.

venues at a bash he'll co-host with Mark Damon's Foresight Unlimited, Laurence Mark and Timothy Scott Bogart in support of the Neil Bogart biopic announced on the eve of Cannes. Timberlake will play the legendary record executive, with RCA Records partnering on the project, now at script stage.

The party will be the second act for the performer, who will also be on hand to press the flesh with buyers at an exclusive, invitation-only brunch. Timberlake also is in Cannes for the world premiere of the Coen brothers' Inside Llewyn Davis, which is playing in competition at the festival.

But the splashiest event of all is likely to be Lionsgate's Saturday night party for The Hunger Games: Catching Fire, one of the most coveted tickets in town. Freshly crowned Oscar-winner Jennifer Lawrence is sure to attract crowds in and outside of the party. All of the Hunger Games films were sold independently internationally and Saturday's soiree is a nod to those who have supported the franchise.

Sellers say it's important to instill confidence in buyers by keeping them involved throughout the process. Ron Howard has met with foreign distributors throughout the financing and making of Exclusive Media's Formula One drama Rush, including showing the film during the European Film Market in February.

Harvey Weinstein will host a buyers' brunch with Burton, in town to push Big Eyes. Pele, the world's most famous soccer player, is in Cannes to boost the profile of the Imagine Entertainment-backed eponymous biopic that International Film Trust is selling. THR underwent three months of procedures drew a heartfelt response from Cannes festival director Thierry Fremaux. "When I go up the steps to open the 66th Cannes Film Festival, I will be thinking in particular about Angelina Jolie," he tells THR. Adds Graham King, producer of In the Land of Blood and Honey and The Tourist: "Angelina's bravery consistently shines through in every aspect of her life — not only in her career choices but in her personal life. I am so proud she has courageously shared her story."

Meanwhile, Fruitvale Station's Octavia Spencer tweeted: "Huge prayers for Angelina Jolie and her family as she convalesces and bravo for raising awareness." THR basis, some have opted out — notably, Sony Picture Worldwide Acquisitions, which nabbed a multiterritory deal in Berlin for Latin America, Australia, New Zealand, Eastern Europe and Scandinavia.

Back in February, Exclusive Media president of sales Alex Walton was signing deals left and right with foreign distributors clamoring to get a piece of Jane because of its script and dazzling cast. But days after Berlin wrapped, Fassbender, whose deal hadn't been finalized, exited. By the end of March, on the eve of the first day of shooting in New Mexico, Ramsay walked off after a three-day standoff with producer Scott Steindorff over final cut. Law — who'd taken over Fassbender's role — also high-tailed it, since he had come aboard to work with Ramsay, who was quickly replaced by director Gavin O'Connor. When Cooper signed on, Walton and the producers breathed a sigh of relief since he is one of only a handful of actors viewed as an international box office star. But then suddenly Cooper was out because of a scheduling conflict (he's still shooting David O. Russell's American Hustle, which was interrupted by the Boston Marathon bombing). Finally, McGregor replaced Cooper to play the villain, a role previously belonging to Joel Edgerton, part of the original cast, who now is playing Portman's love interest.

The budget of the film is $15 million, and the producers — including Portman — had hoped to take a loan against foreign pre-sales to cover some of the budget. But banks often won't release funds after key castmembers exit a production since international distributors can opt out of their contracts. Those foreign distributors who stuck by Jane Got a Gun say they are biding their time until they see a cut of the film. "It still has Portman, and there is no pressure on me as a buyer to do anything until it gets done and they have something to show," one says.

During Cannes, Walton, who remains high on the film, will show footage to pump up foreign distributors, as well as sell rights in the remaining available markets. And, in a final twist, Exclusive's Cannes office is down the street from the festival headquarters, where Ramsay is now a jury member. THR

Production Delays Have Buyers Grousing

By Scott Roxborough

Buyers heading into this year's Cannes market are griping that production delays on several big titles are making it harder to commit to new films being shopped around.

Films such as Robert Rodriguez's hotly anticipated sequels Machete Kills and Sin City 2 were originally pre-sold as 2012 releases but are still in post. Ron Howard's racing movie Rush, starring Chris Hemsworth, sold out worldwide at AFM in 2011, but reshoots pushed its release from 2012 to the fall of this year. Two of the hottest titles at the last Cannes market, Kenny Ortega's Dirty Dancing remake and Adam Hashemi's comedy actioner Agent: Century 21 featuring Cameron Diaz, both have yet to begin shooting.

"There are a lot of great films at the market this year, from all over, but we have to hold back a bit," says Alexander van Duelmen of A Company, which pre-bought Machete Kills and Sin City 2 for Russia. "We can only really plan for movies for 2015."

Alex Watson, president of sales at Exclusive Media, which is selling Agent: Century 21 worldwide, admits that production delays "are frustrating on all sides" and says sellers have to move quickly to manage the situation when a project gets pushed back. "These movies are really tentpoles for our buyers and they have to be able to plan their spending, their cash flow," Watson says. "So if there is a delay, you have to communicate that immediately." Sneak Peek: Kidman as Grace Kelly

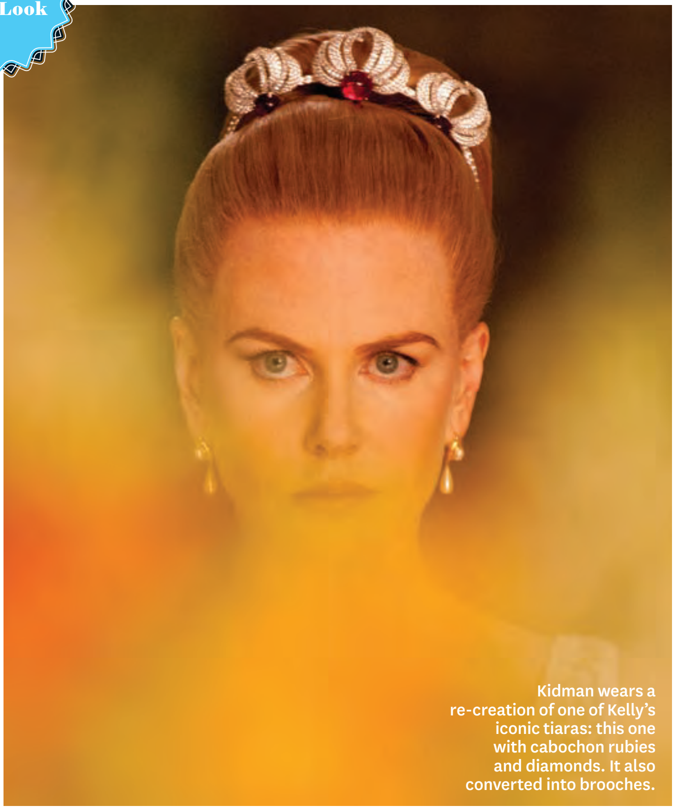
By Scott Roxborough

Grace of Monaco, starring Nicole Kidman, wasn't finished in time for Cannes, but images of Kidman as Hollywood starlet-turned-princess Grace Kelly whet the appetite for Olivier Dahan's historical drama. The shots suggest Dahan is not taking a lookalike approach for the film, something Kidman, speaking to THR in fall 2012 when Grace still was shooting, confirmed. "I'm not trying to re-create Grace, just capture her essence. Like [Dahan's Edith Piaf drama] La Vie en Rose, this is more of an art movie than a strict biopic." The Weinstein Co. will bow Grace of Monaco in an awards-season qualifying run stateside Dec. 27.

Kelly was one of the first celebs to embrace the head scarf wrapped over cat eyes look. "I had a lot of fun with the fashions of the times in this movie," Kidman told THR.

Exclusive First Look

The real Kelly met Prince Rainier III of Monaco after she attended the Cannes film festival.



Kidman wears a re-creation of one of Kelly's iconic tiaras: this one with cabochon rubies and diamonds. It also converted into brooches.

Abigail Breslin to Star in the Thriller 'Peste'

By Gregg Kilday

Abigail Breslin is set to star in Peste — a thriller about a contagious virus sweeping through a small town — which Octane, IM Global's genre label, is financing and shopping at Cannes. The film, to be directed by Mark Ponderai (House at the End of the Street) and produced by Sheryll Clark (Cloverfield), is scheduled to begin production in September, IM Global's CEO Stuart Ford announced. Peste is based on Barbara Marshall's screenplay, which appeared on the Black List, the Blood List and the Hit List in 2012.

Breslin, 17, a supporting actress Oscar nominee for 2006's Little Miss Sunshine, will play a teenager confronting a virus that turns friends and neighbors into vicious monsters. Quarantined with her family, she believes they are out of harm's way until the contagion infiltrates their home.

Breslin is repped by ICM and Lichter, Grossman, Nichols, Adler & Feldman. She next will be seen in Summit/Oddlot's Ender's Game and The Weinstein Co.'s August: Osage County.

Says Ford: "Abigail is one of the outstanding talents of her generation. Her recent standout performances in genre hits like Zombieland, The Call and the forthcoming Ender's Game make her a perfect fit for Peste." THR

Breslin will play a teenager fighting a mysterious virus.

Sony Grabs Timberlake's Spinning Gold

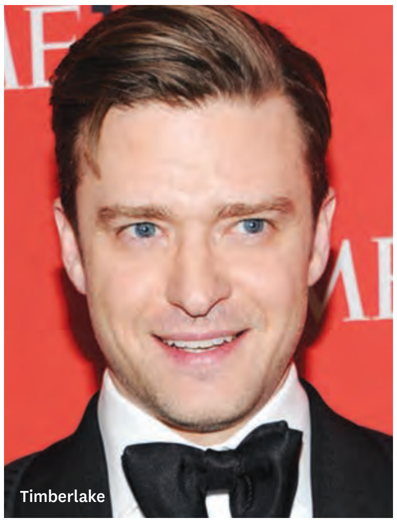
By Pamela McClintock

Bogart



Timberlake

On the eve of the Cannes Film Market, Sony Pictures Worldwide Acquisitions has struck a multiterritory deal for Foresight Unlimited's Neil Bogart biopic Spinning Gold, headlining Justin Timberlake as the infamous record executive who was closely aligned with the rise of disco.

The initial pact is for Latin America, Scandinavia and Eastern Europe, including Russia, the Czech Republic, Hungary and Poland. Sony Worldwide is expected to acquire rights for additional major territories in the coming days.

Mark Damon's Foresight is financing and producing Spinning (Damon knew Bogart, who died at the age of 39 in 1982). Today, Timberlake and Foresight will co-host a brunch for foreign buyers to plug the film, followed later in the evening by a music-laced party.

Timothy Scott Bogart, Neil Bogart's son, wrote the script and is producing alongside Laurence Mark, Gary A. Randall, Timberlake and Damon.

The film is set to start shooting early next year, although a director hasn't yet been announced. RCA Records also will partner on the project and will release the movie's soundtrack. CAA is representing domestic rights.

Spinning is described as a rags-to-riches story chronicling the life of a poor kid from Brooklyn who went on to define the pop-music culture of his time. In his day, Bogart, was credited with discovering and launching the careers of superstars like Curtis Mayfield, KISS, Parliament, Donna Summer and The Village People.

The deal was negotiated by Foresight president Tamara Birkemoe and Jenna Sanz-Agero on behalf of Foresight, and Michael Helfand, executive vp of business affairs, Joe Matukewicz, senior vp of acquisitions, and Jon Freedberg, vp of business development, on behalf of SPWA.

Al Pacino will play the eccentric A.J. Manglehorn in David Gordon Green's latest.

John Woo

Gemma Arterton

Pacino Boards Gordon Green's Manglehorn

Al Pacino will star in David Gordon Green's drama Manglehorn, which Worldview Entertainment will finance and produce. Pacino will play the title character, A. J. Manglehorn, an eccentric man coming to terms with a past crime that cost him the love of his life, in the screenplay by Paul Logan, based on an original story by Green and Logan. Christopher Woodrow, Worldview CEO, and the company's COO, Molly Conners, will produce alongside Lisa Muskat and Green. London-based WestEnd Films is handling international sales and will introduce the film to buyers in Cannes, while CAA, which arranged the financing, is repping domestic rights.

Woo's Crossing to Become Two-Parter

John Woo will expand his latest project, the historical epic The Crossing, into two parts, according to the films' financier Beijing Galloping Horse. Beijing Galloping Horse's head of international sales, Ronan Wong, says Woo will start shooting the films next month. Budgeted at $30 million, The Crossing is produced by the Beijing-based company and Lion Rock Productions — owned by Woo and his producer partner Terence Chang — as well as China Film Group and Zhejiang Huace Film & TV. Starring Zhang Ziyi and Song Hye-kyo, the project launched in Cannes in 2008 as 1949 and subsequently was given the tentative title of The Pacific. The film is said to be about a real-life steamer ship that sank in 1949 while on its way from Shanghai to Kaohsiung, bringing more than 900 passengers down with it. Digital Domain, the VFX house which Beijing Galloping Horse acquired alongside India's Reliance Mediaworks last year, will handle the film's special effects.

Fortissimo Takes Sales Rights to Hartley's Rifle

The third and final chapter of Hal Hartley's tragicomic trilogy (begun with Henry Fool in 1998), Ned Rifle will star Gemma Arterton (Clash of the Titans, Hansel & Gretel: Witch Hunters), Parker Posey, Thomas Jay Ryan and Liam Aiken. Shooting is expected to begin in the fall, with a wrap date in early 2014. The deal was handled by Fortissimo's managing director, Nelleke Driessen, and Bruce Weiss, who produced Hartley's early picture, Trust, and who will co-produce Ned Rifle along with Hartley and Matthew Myers.

Hong Kong's Donnie Yen Unveils Special Identity

First-look footage of Hong Kong action-star Donnie Yen's martial-arts thriller Special Identity will make its market debut at Cannes this week, according to the film's sales rep Easternlight. Directed by Clarence Fok, the film features Yen as a policeman increasingly alienated and imperiled when he goes undercover with a criminal gang whose paranoid leader begins purging his clan of possible moles. Yen also directed the film's action and served as joint executive producer of the film alongside Peter Pau, the Oscar-winning cinematographer of Ang Lee's Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon.

Russian Animators Team for Sheep and Wolves

Two of Russia's most successful animation producers are teaming up to make a new $7 million animated film. Wizart Animation, the Voronezh-based studio behind The Snow Queen — which is still rolling out internationally and has grossed $12.4 million in Russia, Ukraine, the Baltics and other territories — is joining St. Petersburg's STV to produce Sheep and Wolves, a 3D cartoon caper involving a young wolf who wakes up one day to find he has turned into a sheep. Both films will also be produced in 2D versions. THR

From Blow-out to Takeout: A Cannes Survival Guide

Everything a high-maintenance Hollywood-type needs for the marathon fest but doesn't know how to ask for en francais

Blow-out Sure, it's a chain, but Lorenzo Cosi's hairdressers can take last-minute appointments, and all shops are English-friendly. Owner Sergio also will solve style emergencies with a blow-out or updo at your hotel. A blow-out and style starts at €60 ($78); an in-room hotel visit is €200 ($262). 11 rue des Etats-Unis, 04.92.59.08.33

Dry Cleaning Pressing Moliere will pick up and has same-day service available. Prices range from €6 ($8) for a shirt to €20 ($26) for a gown, plus 30 percent for same-day service. Otherwise, the item will be ready by noon the next day. 8 rue Moliere, 04.93.99.08.68

Florist For an elegant thank-you for a helpful publicist, a single orchid from Black Card Fleuriste will run you about €30 ($40); bouquets start around €40 ($52), with a €5 ($7) delivery fee to hotels. 10 rue Jean de Riouffe, 04.93.39.27.22

Tailoring Line (pronounced Lee-na, the savvy seamstress' name) Couture will arrange pickup and delivery and can handle next-morning or late-night emergencies. It's open every day, but prices are higher on Sundays and vary depending on scope of alteration. 17 boulevard de la Croisette, 04.93.68.93.77

Tech Support Fnac, an electronics chain throughout France owned by Kering (its CEO is Francois-Henri Pinault — that's Mr. Salma Hayek to you), can help with Mac or PC emergencies. While you await your device's diagnosis, hang out in the store's cafe, which will have an exhibit on Steven Spielberg's Lincoln throughout the festival and Cesar-winning composer Eric Serra in-house May 22. Open Monday to Saturday, 10 a.m.- 7:30 p.m.; Sunday, 11 a.m.- 7 p.m. 83 rue d'Antibes, 08.25.02.00.20

Takeout You can get sushi or pizza delivered by motorbike, but anything better can be hard to come by. For a late-night Big Mac jones, call Couby's Cafe. Open until midnight, it will pack up American-style burgers (and fries) for takeout. 3 boulevard de Lorraine, 04.93.30.03.37

American Coffee While Starbucks has invaded Paris and even opened in nearby Nice, Cannes remains free of Seattle's siren. For a homey caffeine fix, either head to the American Pavilion or try the American-inspired Coffee & Cookies, which offers Frappuccino-style blended coffee drinks, smoothies, muffins and "not-too-bad-for-France" bagels. Drinks starting at Starbucks prices, about €4 ($5). 2 square Merimee, 04.92.28.06.63

Yoga Need a chakra boost before your 9:30 sales meet or a Zen detox to restore your will to live? The Vinyasa Yoga Studio offers a full program of classes from power morning sessions to meditation relaxation designed to eliminate jet lag. One-hour private lessons are available at the studio between 3 and 5 p.m. daily for €80 ($105), or an instructor will come to your hotel room for €100 ($130) an hour. Call Cathy at least 24 hours in advance to arrange private sessions. Open Monday to Saturday, 9 a.m.-7:30 p.m. 14 rue Buttura, 04.93.38.68.74

Gifts Looking for the perfect cadeaux to take home? Famed macaron maker and longtime goody-bag favorite during fashion week — even models love the colorful bite-sized cookies — Laduree opened an outpost in Cannes in the fall. Boxes start at €20 ($26), and you can pick your favorite flavors from the daily options. 79 rue d'Antibes, 04.93.38.05.06

Doctor Revel in the old-fashioned house call, still de rigueur across France: A GP comes to your door within an hour. Prices depend on diagnosis, but be prepared to pay about €75 ($98). Your medecin will give you a receipt to submit to your U.S.-based insurance. Cannes has a special area number: SOS Medecins Cannes Grasse et Region, 08.25.00.50.04

Quick Getaway It's a snap to escape from the players and the wannabes, the Blackberrys, the deals, the 15-minute meetings and all the hustle and flow. Just hop a ferry for the 20-minute ride to St. Honorat Island (€14 round-trip; the first boat leaves at 8 a.m., the last one back is 6 p.m.) and experience the spiritual bliss the Cistercian monks have enjoyed here since AD 410. Pre-book for a weeklong post-festival retreat at the monastery itself or just go to spend a day decompressing — as long as your idea of decompressing doesn't include nudism (forbidden) or loud noises (discouraged). St. Honorat is just under a mile long and a quarter mile wide so it's easy to get around on foot.

SPIELBERG PLUS 8: A STAR-STUDDED PANEL

Fresh off the Oscar-nominated Lincoln, Steven Spielberg returns to Cannes as the president of the competition jury, joined by this esteemed octet in anointing this year's Palme d'Or winner

Daniel Auteuil: The Grand Acteur With Gerard Depardieu now officially a Russian citizen, the position of 63-year-old Auteuil as the French industry's go-to actor of a certain age (he's sometimes called the Gallic Robert De Niro) is uncontested.

Vidya Balan: The Bollywood Heroine After acclaimed turns in features such as The Dirty Picture — she gained 26 pounds to play '80s erotic actress Silk Smitha — Balan, 35, secured her position as a power player with her marriage in December to top Indian producer Siddharth Roy Kapur.

Ang Lee: The Golden Boy Taiwanese-American Lee, 58, with a directing Oscar under his belt for Life of Pi not to mention a $600 million-plus global gross, also is a poster boy for "grown-up" 3D — the format for this year's opener, The Great Gatsby.

Naomi Kawase: The Art-House Auteur Japanese director Kawase, 43, a 2007 Grand Prix winner for The Mourning Forest, brings art house cred. Her films are near-documentary examinations of uncomfortable subjects such as aging and death.

Nicole Kidman: The Star It looks like 2013 will be a busy year for Kidman, 45, with Oscar-bait performances playing Grace Kelly in Olivier Dahan's Grace of Monaco and alongside Colin Firth in WWII drama The Railway Man.

Lynne Ramsay: The Elusive Indie Queen Scottish filmmaker Ramsay's 2011 competition title, We Need to Talk About Kevin, made several best-of lists. But Ramsay, 43, quit planned follow-up Jane Got a Gun on the eve of principal photography.

Cristian Mungiu: The Conscience An uncompromising filmmaker who favors realism with a social message, Mungiu, 45, launched Romania's much-lauded new wave with his Palme d'Or-winning debut, 4 Months, 3 Weeks and 2 Days, in 2007.

Christoph Waltz: The Returning Hero Since winning best actor in Cannes for Inglourious Basterds in 2009, for which he went on to win the first of his two Oscars, Waltz, 56, has smartly chosen roles that have kept him on the A-list with critics and fans. — S.R.

About Town

RAMBLING REPORTER By Gary Baum & Merle Ginsberg

Party Roll Call

You didn't come to Cannes just for the movies, did you? This year's party calendar is as packed as ever. Following this evening's opening-night soiree for The Great Gatsby behind the Palais (in a smaller venue than for director Baz Luhrmann's famously lavish 2001 Moulin Rouge! party), Martin Scorsese will toast the announcement of his next film, Silence, on May 16 aboard liquor brand John Walker & Sons' Voyager yacht docked at the Jetee Albert Edouard. Later in the evening, Calvin Klein is having a hullabaloo at L'Ecrin Beach, on the east side of Porto Canto, honoring Nicole Kidman (just named the face of Jimmy Choo's fall 2013 ad campaign), Rooney Mara and Carey Mulligan. ... On May 17, Cinequest's bash at the Long Beach Bistro is expected to draw bigwigs from Resolution's Jeff Berg to Liam Hemsworth while across town the Haiti-supporting Carnival in Cannes will take over the Agora Pavilion once again. (Meanwhile, Reverend Run of Run-DMC will perform at the nightclub VIP Room.) ... The next day, The Hollywood Reporter and Jimmy Choo will honor international artist of the year Fan Bingbing at a party co-hosted by THR editorial director Janice Min, THR publisher Lynne Segall and Jimmy Choo CEO Pierre Denis at the Mouton Cadet Wine Bar. The same night sees the Hunger Games: Catching Fire celebration at Baoli Beach. Director-producer Julie Pacino — daughter of Al — will take over hip club Le Baron to fete her shingle Poverty Row's The First, a biopic about pioneering Hollywood star Mary Pickford. ... On May 19, director Lee Daniels, currently in postproduction on The Butler, will return to the American Pavilion to host Queer Night for a second year. The philanthropically minded will head to the Creative Coalition's dinner for Julian Lennon at Plage Vegaluna, or to the Art of Elysium event at the Chateau de la Napoule celebrating supporter Ahna O'Reilly, an actress whose Fruitvale Station and As I Lay Dying both are at the fest. (Her ex, Dying director James Franco, will co-host.) ... Over the course of the festival, Britain's Pinewood Studios will make repeated use of its 120-foot yacht, the promisingly named Wild Thyme, while blingy local dance club Gotha has booked the likes of Snoop Dogg to perform and Paris Hilton to DJ. ... Although film premiere afterparties continue unchecked until the very end of Cannes, the last few days offer notable reprieves for good causes, including Prince Albert II's Nights in Monaco gala May 22, as well as the traditional carousing denouement: amFAR's Cinema Against AIDS event, at the Hotel du Cap-Eden-Roc, where Shirley Bassey, Ellie Goulding and Duran Duran each will take the stage.

What Rosé to Order

If you're at the Carlton, and you've snagged a table at Restaurant de la Plage, you'd better be sipping from a glass of rosé. Without, I'd submit, the table would seem rather naked, and the picture-postcard moment incomplete. Rosé wine is the lens through which one views the south of France, the ideal accompaniment to everything from an aperitif or an alfresco lunch to a moment of oceanside reverie from the terrace.

Much of the pink wine for the region is grown and made southwest of Cannes, in appellations like the Cotes de Provence, Coteaux Varois, Palette and, most famously, Bandol. The best-known Provencal wine properties to Americans, Domaines Ott and Domaine Tempier, have been imported for decades, and Tempier has been a California icon of Mediterranean life for the better part of 50 years. As for Domaines Ott (several estates under a single "umbrella" winery), its distinctively shaped bottle and pale salmon hue is a summer afternoon fixture in ice buckets from Bel Air to Cap d'Antibes.

If you want to impress at your business lunch on the Croisette, you can't go wrong with either the Bandol or the Domaines Ott. Pricing can be wildly divergent: The same bottle that goes for 11 euros at the local Monoprix can be three times that at a typical Cannes restaurant. Both of these wines, like many of the rosés of Provence, tend to be paler than many of their French counterparts (such as in the more crimson Tavel rosés in the nearby Cotes du Rhône). Don't let their peachskin pallor fool you. Most Provencal rosés contain a healthy proportion of mourvedre, a sturdy red variety that yields an equally stalwart pink wine, contributing its share of minerality and grip to the wine's structure even as it lures you with its delicate red berry scent and succulent flavors.

In addition to Domaines Ott and Tempier, there are a handful of Provencal rosés you can pick up in local wine shops: Seek out Saint André de Figuière, Domaine de Triennes, Chateau d'Esclans or Chateau Routas. Make sure they're young (2011 or 2012 vintage) and ice cold. Because of their structure, Provencal rosés are quite versatile, too, pairing well with dishes from grilled fish and seafood to roast chicken. — PATRICK COMISKEY

A Concierge Spills Secrets

Stephane Fanciulli, the Carlton's concierge, is marking his 40th year at the hotel, which itself celebrates its centennial this year. THR checked in with him on the most elaborate — and outrageous — high-profile guest requests that he's made come true.

How far have you gone to fulfill a star's demand?

There was one who wanted to see a specific [athletic] race. Unfortunately, it wasn't shown on a channel available here, so we helped him buy the television rights so he could watch them at the Carlton.

What about during the festival itself?

I remember we had to organize a party at a villa here for a star. The guest wanted to organize a dinner in a place just behind the hotel. As a guest, they asked us to provide all the staff and they wanted to have them dressed up as people from the 18th century.

OK, enough with the anonymous dish. What about some juice on a name?

I do remember when Diana Ross was at Cannes for the festival, I think in the 1970s, and she was also giving a concert. She asked to have all the walls and all the floors covered with pink carnations. So we brought in a florist. When she came back from the concert she was so surprised: Everything was covered in hundreds of flowers. And she also had asked me to find a Lincoln — a pink Lincoln. That was a very unusual car to find. We didn't have one in Cannes, so I made an inquiry and we eventually found it in Geneva. They brought it here. We had to bring it all the way. — RHONDA RICHFORD

Carey Mulligan's Minimalist Moves

Gamine, waif, boho, girly but not too — many words have been used to describe Carey Mulligan's style since the actress burst onto the international film fashion scene with her Oscar-nominated turn in 2009's An Education. But as the 27-year-old star's hair color has morphed (to platinum), so has her style: During the latest round of Great Gatsby press, she's been stripped of almost all makeup and even of color. There's been a proliferation of sharp architectural looks, probably courtesy of her new stylist as of March — Ryan Hastings, who works with Rooney Mara and Robert Pattinson — and a newish rocker husband, Marcus Mumford. The safety-pinned Balenciaga she wore to the punk-themed Met Ball and the Lanvin spring 2013 tux she donned for a Gatsby screening were the height of minimalism. Mulligan's previous stylists, the British Tina Lakonen and L.A.–based Samantha McMillen, regularly put her in unusual Pradas (like the lit-from-within metallic one she wore to the 2012 Met Ball) and wild avant-garde Vionnets. As her career ascends, Mulligan has hung up the scene-stealing fashionista looks, and a sleeker, modest-looking child-woman has emerged. What would Daisy Buchanan think?

Fabulous Fonda

Aside from Cannes juror Diane Kruger and Rust and Bone actress Marion Cotillard, the hottest style star to emerge out of Cannes 2011 and 2012 was no ingenue: It was 75-year-old Jane Fonda, who has attended Cannes for more than a dozen years as a L'Oreal ambassador.

THR spoke with her stylist, Tanya Gill, who works with Hilary Swank and Olivia Munn and also is the producer of TLC's Something Borrowed, about how she puts together her Cannes looks. "In 2011, I approached Pucci designer Peter Dundas about making a dress for Jane," says Gill. "She looks better now than when she was 21 years old. And of course, it doesn't hurt that she's in love!" (Fonda has been dating music producer Richard Perry for more than three years.) At Cannes 2012, Roberto Cavalli sent Gill one-of-a-kind dresses for the star, who looked more va-va-voom than the 20-year-old models on the Cannes carpet.

What will this year's fest bring out in Fonda, who's only in Cannes for the first few days, then jets back to New York to shoot This Is Where I Leave You? "We've had some things made," says Gill. "You'll be surprised. Everyone will."

Steven Soderbergh

Retiring? Well, not exactly, as he talks Behind the Candelabra, and how some might be shocked to see 'Jason Bourne on top of Gordon Gekko' By Tatiana Siegel

CALL IT A SABBATICAL, NOT A retirement. Cinephiles have been bracing for Steven Soderbergh's exit from filmmaking ever since he began talking in 2009 about retiring from creating movies. The 50-year-old director, who won the Palme d'Or with his first film, 1989's sex, lies, and videotape, is taking an indefinite break from the big screen. (He instead will be focusing on episodic TV.) But he's not ruling out more movies in the future. Before heading to Cannes, Soderbergh spoke with The Hollywood Reporter at his soon-to-be-vacated office in New York's Flatiron district about the studios' uninspired marketing campaigns, how he discovered a way into his new movie about master showman Liberace and how that film plays into the debate about marriage equality.

So, are you really retiring?
I'm sort of taking time off and just trying to determine whether I can come at movies from a different direction. That's something I think I can't really explore while undertaking another movie. I think I can explore that philosophically and contextually while making some television. I think I need to take an extended sabbatical from movies while I think about that.

What kind of television will you tackle?
I've got a couple things that I'm circling that I probably will land soon. The good news is that there are a lot of options, a lot of channels, a lot of outlets, a lot of models. This is a really good time to go make some interesting TV. The issue for me is going to be my completionist streak. I would want to do all of a first season.

How did Behind the Candelabra come about? Did Michael Douglas break into a Liberace impression while filming Traffic?
Well, that's the first time I discussed the idea with him, and he did do a little impression, which I thought was excellent. I'd done some research on [Liberace] but wasn't really happy with my ideas for how to do it. It took me six or seven years before a writer friend in New York, said, "Oh you don't know about the book?" And I said, "Which book?" And he said this guy [Scott Thorson] wrote a book that I'd never heard of. So I got a copy of that. And then I found my way in. We were essentially following Scott. That sort of solved my problem of how to do Lee's [Liberace's nickname] life, which was basically using Scott as the Trojan horse to get into the problem about Lee. It gave me a definitive time period, and it gave me a structure because of the arc of the relationship. That was in 2007. Jerry [Weintraub] got the book. We hired Richard [LaGravenese, to write the screenplay]. It was developed originally at Warners, but they didn't want to do it.

At that point you took it to HBO?
It was just happenstance that Jerry was finishing that documentary about himself, and he got into a conversation with HBO about this. They said, "This looks like a deal that's gonna go. We'll get back to you in a day." They fully financed it. $22.8 million.

How much contact did you have with Scott Thorson?
Jerry talked to him. Just a couple conversations to deal with sorting the rights out. When you're telling a true story, there's certain cases in which you really want people involved and certain cases where you feel like, "I don't know that that's going to help." We had the book. I did talk to some people that worked with Lee, and that was helpful, mostly to ask them their impressions of Scott to see if they lined up to the impression that he gave of himself in the book or not. But in the same way that I didn't want Matt [Damon meeting with the real] Mark Whitacre of The Informant!, I didn't want him being pulled by who Scott Thorson is now, 30 years later. I wanted him to be able to feel free to interpret it as he could.

What was it about Liberace that intrigued you?
For the life of me I don't know why I was standing on the set of Traffic in Cincinnati, Ohio, and I looked over at Michael and asked him if he would ever consider playing Liberace. I really don't know where this came from. I'm old enough to have seen him on TV at my parents' place, and found him very entertaining. I was kind of intrigued by the incredible technical skill being masked by this flamboyant persona. Underneath this performer who was all about entertaining his audience and giving them a good time was actually a concert-level skilled keyboardist. It's kind of like if LeBron James decided to play for the Harlem Globetrotters. There really wasn't anybody like him. And there are a lot of people now that owe him a real debt because of how he presented himself. This guy invented bling. He loved performing.

How did Matt Damon get involved?
He was in Spain doing his cameo in Che, and I gave him the book. I can only imagine what was going through his mind five years later before we started shooting. But Matt doesn't have anything to protect. That's not how he makes his decisions. He makes his decisions based on whether he's engaged by the piece or not. If it turns out to be something that's really gonna push him as a performer, even better. And Michael, he was just fearless. They both are. The movie just doesn't work if they don't both literally join hands and jump off the cliff. It's intimate stuff, even if it was a guy and a girl. But for a lot of people it'll be hard to see Jason Bourne on top of Gordon Gekko.

Do you see the film as making a statement about marriage equality?
There's certainly an undertow to the movie that comes from the knowledge that they could be married today, like Elton John.

You recently talked about what is wrong with the film industry at the San Francisco Film Festival.
I felt that I earned the right to weigh in on a process that I think can be improved because as a filmmaker, from the minute that you propose an idea until after the film has come out, all anyone does to you is ask you, "Can it be better than this? What are you doing? What if you did this? What if you did that?" Also, every studio movie poster looks the same. If you look at the campaigns in the '70s that were really striking, they were done by ad agencies, they weren't done by the studios. If I ran a studio right now, instead of spending $30 million on P&A, I'd take $10 million and go to the best ad agency on the planet and say you've got $10 million. Do something provocative. Do something distinctive.

WHY I MOVED TO CHINA

An American expat discusses his experience setting up his own effects shop in Beijing seven years ago

by Christopher Bremble

I first arrived in China in August 2002. We landed at midnight in Haikou, on Hainan Island, to oppressive heat and humidity. The boom-and-bust cycle of the past years had created a landscape of unfinished buildings. It felt — to this boy from Bucks County, Pa. — like a war zone. Then my interpreter broke the spell by asking, "Do you know Brad Pitt?"

The following morning, I woke in my hotel and opened the blinds to see a building across the street being torn down by 150 workers with sledgehammers. They were knocking down all seven floors at the same time. The energy and chaos reminded me of the indie film business. I thought to myself, "You could make movies here."

When I first came to China, there were a small number of filmmakers — mostly from Hong Kong — but there wasn't a huge theatergoing audience. Now, when I go past a theater, there is always a line. It doesn't matter what's on; the cinemas are always full.

What's shocking is, this theater boom hasn't even reached the second- and third-tier cities — they are still building in the first tier. And half the population isn't urbanized yet. The growth potential is astounding.

But at the same time, I am seeing signs of a bubble in the Chinese film industry. We used to have maybe 100 Chinese films made a year; now it's more like 700, mostly low-budget comedies. It's hard to get talent. Margins are razor-thin. The Chinese have even started to make movies in Thailand to save money — see last year's huge hit Lost in Thailand.

But it wasn't the promise of China's billion-plus "consumers" that brought me here or keeps me in China; it was the passion and hope of a younger generation that wants to be relevant, yearns to be successful and, more than anything, has a hunger to participate in creating media for the world.

Christopher Bremble is CEO of Base FX, Asia's leading visual effects studio. Base has won two Emmys (for* The Pacific and Boardwalk Empire*) and has more than 20 U.S. theatrical film credits including* G.I. Joe: Retaliation, Super 8 and Mission: Impossible — Ghost Protocol. In 2012, the studio signed a strategic alliance agreement with Lucasfilm and Industrial Light & Magic.

The Best (and Strangest) 3D Cinemas Around the World

Korona World
NAGOYA, JAPAN

Billed as Japan's first "full-body, full-immersive" movie theater, Korona World features 4DX technology, developed by CJ Group in South Korea, which adds moving seats, squirting water and a system capable of emitting "1,000 unique scents" to the 3D experience. Iron Man 3 was the first movie screened in the cinema, which plans to screen 12 titles a year using the new format.

Astor Film Lounge
BERLIN

For those who prefer 3D thrills in a more civilized setting, there's Germany's most luxurious 3D cinema, part of a growing trend toward high-end movie watching in Europe. Astor Film Lounge aims to make every film feel like a red-carpet premiere: Guests are greeted with champagne cocktails, and a three-course meal is brought directly to them in their plush, go-all-the-way-back leather seats.

PVR Director's Cut
NEW DELHI

Located in the Ambience shopping mall in upscale south Delhi, this state-of-the-art 3D cinema is a cut above anything else on the subcontinent. It starts with the marbled lobby, the walls of which are adorned with signed portraits of directors ranging from Martin Scorsese to the late Bollywood legend Yash Chopra. Patrons are greeted with a welcome fruit juice and a warm face towel to freshen up. Other perks include a complimentary blanket and an extra cushion for comfort. Producer Jon Landau was noticeably impressed with the venue when he visited for a special screening of Titanic 3D in 2012.

Secret Cinema
LONDON

Britain's Secret Cinema organizes immersive urban events around screenings. In 2012, it transformed a vast abandoned warehouse into a spacecraft for a 3D screening of Ridley Scott's Prometheus. Radiohead created a soundtrack specifically for the event. Organizers have since added a dining element to the Secret Cinema experience, designing restaurants based around a film's setting and characters. After becoming wildly successful in the U.K., Secret Cinema is set to arrive in New York by year's end.

India's PVR cinema (left) offers fruit juice and warm towels; London's Secret Cinema turned a screening venue into a spaceship for Prometheus.

Library War Breaks Out!

©"LIBRARY WARS" Movie Project

Full-scale armed combat has broken out at the Museum of Information History, as the East Region Library Defense Task Force seeks to protect documents related to censorship and the original passage of the Media Betterment Act against seizure by Media Betterment Special Agency units.

In 2019, public anger at media excess has led to censorship of television, newspapers, the internet, books, movies, and music under the ‘Media Betterment Act’. To fight the armed ‘Betterment Squads’ that go around destroying objectionable materials, the nation’s libraries have formed their own para-military ‘Library Defense’. Iku Kasahara is a new recruit to the corps, where her instructor and squad leader is Atsushi Dojo. At first repelled by his by-the-book approach to leadership, she is gradually won over by his commitment to their battle for ‘books’ and ‘the freedom to know.’

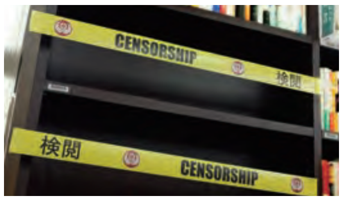
Library Defense vs Media Betterment Special Agency

Under the ‘Media Betterment Act’, passed in 1989 to control expression deemed harmful to morality and public order, the Special Agency of the Justice Ministry’s ‘Media Betterment Committee’ has censorship powers over publishing, broadcasting, the internet, and all other forms of public media. The ‘Declaration of Library Freedom’ under the ‘Libaries Act’ of the same year made libraries the one organization with the authority to resist censorship, and the armed ‘Library Defense’ force was formed in 2004. Library Defense is publicly funded and empowered to preserve all censored materials within library confines, and to use force in their protection. Library Defense, however, is in principle allowed only to take defensive action.



Incriminating documentation relating to hidden dealings in the passage of the Media Betterment Act has been held at the Museum of Information History, but with the death of its founder, Sohachi Nobeyama, former director of the Nobeyama Foundation, this facility is to close, and by the terms of his will the materials held there are to be transferred to East Region Library Defense. The Media Betterment Special Agency, to whose existence these materials pose a threat, is attempting to seize them by force.

This armed clash comes four days after Nobeyama’s death. The Media Betterment Special Agency has demanded to be allowed to censor materials held in the library under the terms of the Betterment Act, a demand Library Defense has refused under the terms of the Libraries Act, leading to the pitched battle currently in progress.

I will do anything you say. Just open your eyes.

JAPAN'S AGING MOVIEGOER PROBLEM

A quarter of its population is over 65 and it slid to second place after China in foreign box office, but the industry is battling back by courting seniors with discounts and movies about 'death instead of sex'

SPECIAL
JAPAN

JAPAN IS ALREADY THE MOST AGED society that mankind has ever seen — and it's getting older. Almost a quarter of its 127 million citizens are over 65, a percentage that is set to nearly double in the coming decades. With a birthrate of only 1.39 children per woman — one of the world's lowest — no significant immigration, and an average life expectancy of nearly 84 years, the graying trend looks unstoppable. (Germany and Italy have the oldest citizenry on earth, and though China is far down the list, its demographics will skew older than Japan's in the next 20 years, thanks to the one-child-per-couple policy begun in 1979.)

How Japan's entertainment industry copes with this seismic shift should provide lessons and solutions for other countries to learn from.

At first glance, the demographic statistics do not make happy reading for many Japanese business sectors besides elder care and pharmaceuticals. And yet all is not doom and gloom. Japan's seniors famously are healthy and active and have a huge pool of savings. The Government Pension Investment Fund, the largest in the world, alone has assets of $1.12 trillion (¥111 trillion), making it larger than the economies of Canada or Spain. Total household assets weigh in at a whopping $16 trillion (¥1,547 trillion), with much of it in the hands of the older population that saved hard during Japan's boom years. That generation grew up during the golden years of Japanese cinema, when moviegoing was an integral leisure activity. And the industry already is registering some success in tempting them back to theaters.

"The generation that is now around retirement age is made up of people who went to the movies five times or more a year when they were young but were often too busy working to go while in their 30s and 40s. They now have the time and money to go and see films," says Kazuya Hamana, president of TBS Pictures, the movie production unit of Japan's TBS TV.

Since 2009, three film industry groups — the movie producers association, the distributors of foreign films and theater owners — have been running an "Eigakan ni Ikou" (Let's Go to the Movies) campaign, offering a $10 (¥1,000) price for couples aged 50 and over, on top of the regular discounts for those 60 and over. Standard adult admission price in Japan is $18 (¥1,800).

"Discounted screenings of remastered classic foreign films at 10 a.m. on weekday mornings have been a big success in getting that generation back into cinemas," says Hamana. "Another way that theaters are appealing to the senior market is through digital screenings of live concerts, opera as well as traditional Japanese entertainment such as Kabuki. Though this is really at the trial-and-error stage now."

Meanwhile, Hollywood faces a double challenge in appealing to younger movie audiences: There are fewer of them, and they have become distinctly more parochial in their taste in recent years. The number of children in Japan has been falling for more than 30 years, with under 15s now making up a record low of less than 13 percent of the overall population, which has begun to shrink. Mirroring a decline in sales for foreign music and interest in the world beyond Japan's shores in general,

CAN JAPAN'S MOST EXPENSIVE CG FILM EVER WORK ABROAD?

The animated Space Pirate Captain Harlock has plans to conquer the world by Gavin J. Blair

Space Pirate Captain Harlock

With an ambitious 3D CG motion-capture reimagining of Leiji Matsumoto's seminal manga and anime series Space Pirate Captain Harlock, Toei Animation is aiming to break the genre out of its fanboy base and onto the global stage.

Directed by Shinji Aramaki (Appleseed) from a screenplay by Harutoshi Fukui (Gundam) and with CGI from Sega-Sammy subsidiary Marza, the $30 million Harlock is the costliest project in Toei's history, 10 times pricier than an average Japanese anime feature.

"With the population in Japan beginning to shrink, the entertainment industry has no choice but to aim at the global market," says Toei's Joseph Chou. "And with the budget on this project, we have no choice but to take it overseas."

"The film was built to be in stereoscopic 3D from the beginning, and that's expensive, though there will be a 2D version released, too," explains executive producer Yoshi Ikezawa.

Futuristic Captain Harlock first appeared in a manga story by Leiji Matsumoto in 1953, and became the star of his own manga stories a quarter century later. Soon after came a TV anime series and a 1982 animated feature, Arcadia of My Youth.

Iconic in Japan, Harlock is celebrated in Europe, particularly France, which honored Matsumoto with the Ordre des Arts et des Lettres award in October for the buccaneer's influence on French popular culture.

But no manga or anime adaptation has been a hit globally. Harlock producer Chou, who has worked with many Japanese properties in Hollywood, says the cultural gap has been close to unbridgeable. Nonetheless, Korea-born Chou, who worked on Warner Bros. The Matrix spinoff animation project The Animatrix, aims to continue trying to cross that chasm with Ikezawa and Toei. It hasn't been easy. "The motion capture and face capture used in the production represents a merger of anime and live action," says Chou. "It's something of a new genre, and we inevitably faced some resistance because of that."

Chou and Ikezawa plan to use Harlock to create a business model with distinctly Japanese-flavored animation features that can thrive in the global marketplace.

The Japanese government has begun to put significant money behind its calls for an increase in "soft power" cultural exports to replace formerly dominant, now-struggling manufacturing industries. Harlock has secured financial support to woo big-name voice actors to help the production in overseas markets. Japanese A-lister Shun Oguri will voice Harlock, and notable English voice talents are in negotiations with Toei.

Harlock will target the U.S. market, possibly launching at ComicCon, though no release date is set. The posters boast a quote from James Cameron, who's seen footage. "We want to make this work in America and Asia, but on our terms."

imported films accounted for only 34.3 percent of 2012 box-office takings, the lowest proportion since 1965.

"The moviegoing rate in Japan averages to about 1.2 a year, but actually older people go to see Hollywood films more. Younger people are even less interested in imported movies," says Yosuke Horiuchi of Toho-Towa, the Toho subsidiary that has been distributing foreign fare in Japan for more than 80 years.

Horiuchi notes that youth-oriented titles such as The Hunger Games or Twilight failed to replicate their global success in Japan, while Les Miserables, with its appeal to older audiences, did disproportionately well.

The demand for heartwarming dramas is up, says Gaga head of acquisitions Satomi Odake, citing Dustin Hoffman's Quartet as a film that resonates with oldsters. Since its Japanese release April 19, it has performed strongly on weekdays, a sign it's doing well with retirees.

"Foreign comedies and horror aren't selling anymore, and the young people those genres should be popular with don't seem to watch them at theaters anymore," says Odake. The only significant comedy import success recently was Ted, which appealed to the particularly Japanese love of all things cute.

The domestic industry, having captured a growing share of Japan's $2 billion (¥200 billion) annual box office in recent years, hasn't yet been forced to fully face the changing demographics of the market.

"A lot of Japanese films are based on existing properties, particularly manga, and most of those are going to be watched almost exclusively by young people," says Osamu Kubota, producer of The Floating Castle (Nobu no Shiro). Manga is the wildly popular Japanese comic-book genre that has a broad appeal to young people.

Kubota says Japan's film sector would be wise to make movies with adult themes and subject matter.

"Some people assume that films have to be about serious topics or human dramas to do well with older audiences, but that's not true. Of course, they can't be childish, but that generation also enjoys entertainment movies," he adds.

According to TBS' Hamana, the industry is thinking about how to produce more films for older audiences, but "inevitably, short-term box-office results are still the focus from a business perspective."

Released in mid-April, The Great Passage (Fune o Amu), a Japanese production, has managed to succeed across a wide age range at the box office through the combination of a young cast and director but with a decidedly adult-oriented storyline about a dictionary compiler.

While elder audiences might want to get nostalgic about their youth through films, they don't want to watch productions that obviously have targeted "old people," according to Yuko Shiomaki, producer and head of Pictures Dept.

The change in Japan's "show business ecosystem" (as Shiomaki puts it) already is visible, with more older, married actors onscreen along with shifting themes, according to Fuji TV's Taka Hayakawa, producer on the Japan in a Day project with Ridley Scott.

Producers are now open to dealing with topics such as "death instead of sex, resilience instead of strength and diversity instead of simplicity," suggests Hayakawa.

Adds Toho-Towa's Horiuchi: "There's going to be a tendency to rely more on good old bankable Hollywood stars such as Brad Pitt, Tom Cruise and Johnny Depp. But they're not getting any younger either." THR

WHY CAN'T HOLLYWOOD ADAPT JAPANESE COMICS?

Manga offers a treasure trove of source material, but obstacles ranging from cultural differences to disputes about rights and option fees remain by Gavin J. Blair

As the number of American comics that haven't yet been adapted for the big screen dwindles, Hollywood studios looking for the next big blockbuster franchise might have to cast their net wider. Japanese manga is a phenomenally rich and varied well of creative potential. But Hollywood's manga adaptation record is less than stellar: no box-office hits, and many projects stuck in the production pipeline. The differing fortunes of the U.S. and Japanese adaptations of Akira Toriyama's Dragon Ball manga illustrate the point.

The new animated Dragon Ball Z — Story of the Gods took in $28 million at the Japanese box office in April, dwarfing the $9.4 million and $8.5 million that the Hollywood live-action Dragonball Evolution earned in the U.S. and Japan, respectively, in 2009. The critical and commercial troubles of the U.S. version, produced and distributed by 20th Century Fox, have become a byword in the Japanese industry for what can go wrong in Hollywood. "Manga artists talk about the 'Dragon Ball problem' and say they don't want their stories ending up like that," says one manga industry insider.

Dragon Ball Z — Story of the Gods has taken in three times as much in Japan as American adaptations of the manga.

Since 1978's Superman, Hollywood has honed its film adaptations of American comics to the point where they earn billions (Iron Man 3, anyone?). Adapting stories from something as culturally different as Japanese manga, of course, is far more challenging.

One problem is that manga publishers like Shuiesha and Shogakukan loom larger in Japanese culture than comics publishers like Marvel/DC do in the U.S. Japanese print manga sell about $4 billion annually — not counting hundreds of millions in electronic editions, spinoff products, licensing revenue or overseas sales. Manga are not seen as childish — salarymen read them on trains, and they're available on every corner. The U.S. market for manga peaked in 2006 at about $200 million, says Milton Griepp, president of trade publication ICv2. "It was about $100 million last year, well over 10 percent of the U.S. comics market," Griepp says, adding that the U.S. market was more driven by teenage girls, whose interest waned when Cartoon Network replaced manga shows with original programming, mall outlets dried up, and Twilight blew up.

In Japan, manga has been an even more important source of stories for movies, anime and TV dramas than U.S. comics have been for Hollywood. From manga sprang the three Sunset on Third Street films, which grossed about $135 million in Japan, and Takashi Miike's gruesome tale of a disturbed hit man Ichi the Killer, banned in at least three countries. Fifteen of the 25 top-grossing Japanese films of 2012 were based on manga, with a domestic take just shy of half a billion dollars.

Given the steady stream of adaptations at home and in Asia, the multibillion manga industry isn't ready to bend over backward for Hollywood. "One reason our properties have been adapted in Europe or Asia but not in Hollywood is that U.S. studios want to buy the rights rather than license them," says Takase. Artists and publishers are reluctant to sell the rights to their creations because, says Takase, they "would lose various license opportunities based on the manga, such as TV drama, TV animation and theatrical feature."

Given the smaller and dwindling market of Americans who grew up on manga, Hollywood has also halved the value of its offers in the past decade, says Takase, who recalls a time when "$1 million for a top property wasn't unusual."

Creative control also is an issue. Unlike the situation for comics in the U.S., the rights to manga remain with the artists, "and publishers like us are more like agents," says Susumu Hieda, a producer at Shueisha, responsible for many of the biggest-selling titles in recent years.

Adaptations in Japan usually are faithful to the original material, and creators are consulted throughout on storyline and character design. Audiences respond to a sense of faithfulness to the source manga: The promotion for Dragon Ball Z in Japan puts the name of the original creator, Akira Toriyama, front and center.

"In the U.S., when studios license something, unless it's considered a sacred text like Harry Potter, people feel they have the right to basically change almost anything," says Jason Hoffs, producer at Viz Productions, an L.A.-based venture created by Shueisha and Shogakukan to facilitate sales of properties to Hollywood.

Adds Hisashi Sasaki, deputy director of the boys' manga group at Shueisha, "We want to work on adaptations with people who have a real interest in manga and will respect the original artist."

Three Manga Titles Ripe for the Hollywood Treatment

→ 7 SEEDS

Yumi Tamura's award-winning 7 Seeds, about five groups of young people who awaken from cryogenic preservation to a postapocalyptic future world, never has been brought to the screen, though it has been adapted for radio. "There are manga that would be difficult to make into movies in Japan because of their scale, and we'd like to see them produced in Hollywood," says Ichiro Takase of the international licensing division at publisher Shogakukan. "7 Seeds is one of those."

→ DORAEMON

In March, Doraemon overtook Godzilla as the biggest film series in Japan, clocking more than 100 million admissions for the animated adventures of the blue "cat-type robot" from the future. Since 1980, 34 Doraemon films have been released based on more than 1,300 manga stories penned by Fujiko Fujio between 1969 and 1996. While the manga, movies and TV anime series all are hugely popular across Asia, Doraemon never has had official English-language versions.

→ HETALIA: AXIS POWERS

The protagonists of the Hetalia manga are irreverently caricatured personifications of the three Axis powers of World War II: Germany, Italy and Japan. Characters representing the Allied powers also make appearances to poke fun at their respective national stereotypes. Hidekazu Himaruya's quirky creation already has spawned a hit anime series and a full-length animated feature, but a live-action version never has been attempted.

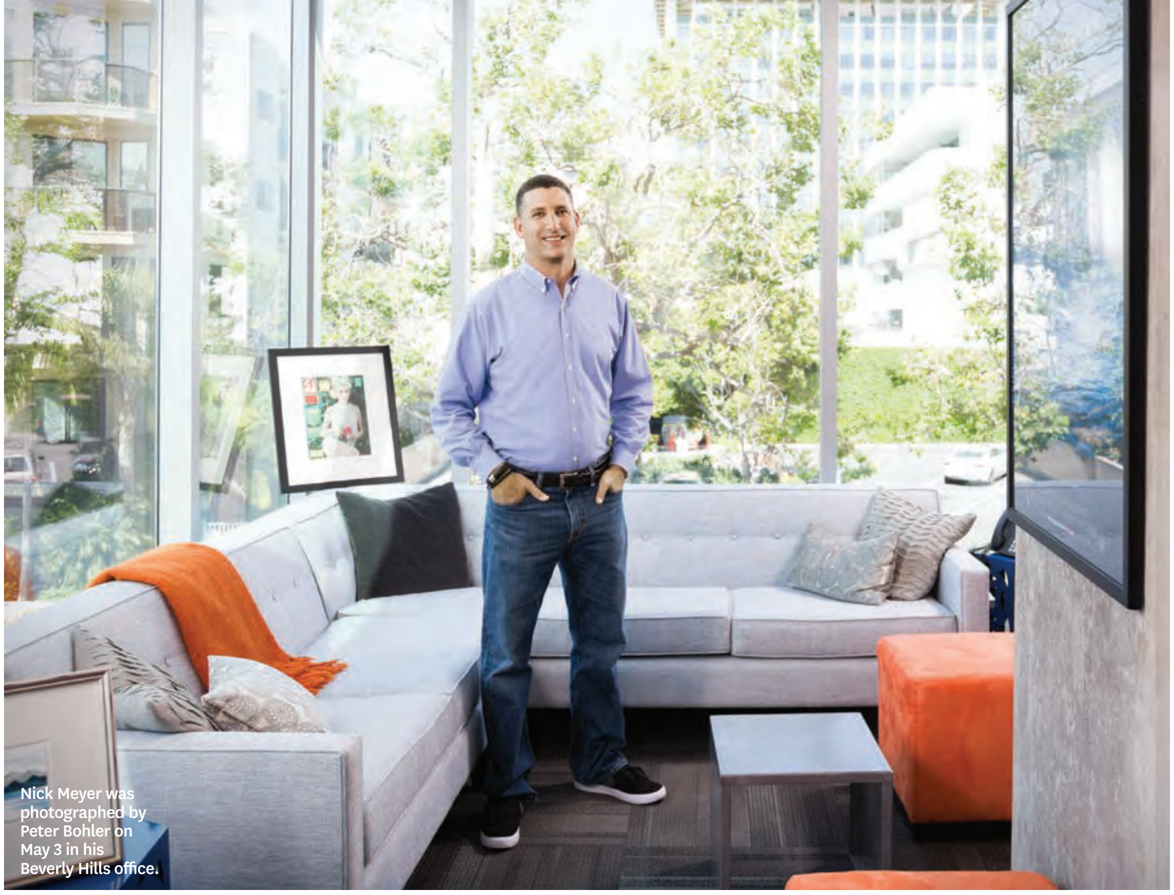
PRESIDENT AND CEO, SIERRA/AFFINITY

Nick Meyer

The former studio exec hits the Croisette with Jon Stewart's directorial debut, Jake Gyllenhaal's Nightcrawler and a fluency in international film (and five languages) By Pamela McClintock



Nick Meyer was photographed by Peter Bohler on May 3 in his Beverly Hills office.

GROWING UP IN SCARSDALE, N.Y., Nick Meyer was half film geek, half hard-driven jock. He's still fiercely competitive, which might explain why he's in such a good mood these days. Sierra/Affinity, the L.A.-based venture he runs with Marc Schaberg, has emerged as one of the top financing, production and international sales outfits in only a few years. Sierra has formidable investors in Gigi Pritzker's OddLot Entertainment (Pritzker's family owns Hyatt hotels), Michel Litvak's Bold Films and Incentive Filmed Entertainment and is the exclusive international sales agent for all three, plus Sidney Kimmel Entertainment. This gives the company a direct pipeline to plum projects like critical darling Drive and current indie hit The Place Beyond the Pines, both of which did substantial business overseas. Sierra co-sells some projects with Lakeshore and handles numerous third-party titles. At this year's Cannes Film Market, Meyer's team will be pitching foreign distributors on high-profile projects including Nightcrawler, starring Jake Gyllenhaal. On the eve of Cannes, Meyer, 44, who lives in Los Angeles with his wife and three children, sat down with THR to talk about what's ahead for Sierra — think Ender's Game, the adaptation of the Orson Scott Card novel starring Asa Butterfield and Harrison Ford — and why he likes working outside of the studio system.

How did you get into the international sales business?
It was a combination of who I am culturally — my parents were both Swiss — my interest in other parts of the world and my love of movies. I would venture to say I was the only kid in high school who watched every Lina Wertmuller movie. At the same time, I was the captain of the soccer team. It was odd.

How many times have you been to Cannes?
I think it's around 15 or 16. The first time was when I was studying in Paris for a year and getting my master's degree through Middlebury College. I decided to write a thesis on independent film distribution in France and I wanted to get a job at the Cannes Film Festival, so I worked as an intern handing out VHS tapes of movie clips to foreign journalists.

After running Lionsgate International, you were co-president of Paramount Vantage. Was it tough striking out on your own after you left Paramount in 2008?
Yes. When people look at where we are now, they say, "Wow, that was fast." It didn't feel that way. I learned a very valuable lesson in that I thought everything was going to come to me because of every job that I had, and every relationship. It was a rude awakening to find out that unless I had projects that people wanted, it wasn't going to happen. You have to put yourself on an equal playing field. And that took us longer than we thought.

What was the turning point?
Launching Ender's Game to foreign buyers at Cannes in 2011 was a serious highlight. That same Cannes, we had also started selling The Place Beyond the Pines and Parker. That was a huge moment for the growth of our company. There have been many other successes, including The Call and the upcoming Steve Carell comedy The Way, Way Back. We also jointly sell some titles with Lakeshore, including I, Frankenstein, which opens in January.

There are high expectations for fall's YA adaptation Ender's Game. How did the movie come about?
Gigi [Pritzker] was a partner in the company and we talked about how we could help with the foreign piece and arrange financing. OddLot and [director] Gavin Hood had developed an outstanding script, and we created a sizzle reel. We sold out in almost every foreign territory, while Summit struck a domestic deal.

Do you think you can replicate the wild success of Twilight or The Hunger Games? Earlier this year, Beautiful Creatures failed to gain a foothold.
Ender's Game is a unique property with a legacy. It's a book that's been around for 20 years and it's back on the New York Times best-seller list. Part of it is the fact that it is required reading in middle schools across the country.

I don't think people realize how well Drive, and now The Place Beyond the Pines, did internationally, where you consulted with foreign distributors on the marketing. Drive grossed $41.1 million overseas, compared with $35 million in the U.S. The Place Beyond the Pines has grossed $33.2 million globally, including nearly $15 million internationally. Why?
While Pines may feel very American, because it's a saga about fathers and sons in upstate New York, it has a very auteur feel that makes it a great play overseas. And Derek [Cianfrance] is a very well-respected director coming off of Blue Valentine. And there couldn't be bigger stars than Ryan Gosling [also the star of Drive] and Bradley Cooper.

OddLot is financing Rosewater, which marks Jon Stewart's directorial debut. The film tells the real-life story of BBC journalist Maziar Bahari. Will you be selling it at Cannes this year?
We are introducing the project to select buyers. It is a poignant, personal true story from a great creative team, which includes Oscar-winning producer Scott Rudin, Emmy-winning creator Jon Stewart and our partners at OddLot. It's a true story of family, faith and courage based on the acclaimed best-selling memoir Then They Came for Me. The project is a prestige film with thrills, emotion and tremendous power.

With the international box office exploding, what does it mean for Sierra?
The hunt for really good intellectual property is the driver. And rigor. You have to be rigorous and hardworking. And all the knowledge that I've been able to gather, all the jobs I've had, and all the learning, has given me the tools.

You're fluent in five languages. What are they?
English and I picked up German because my parents spoke it amongst themselves. I learned the rest [French, Italian and Spanish] in high school and college. I just had the ear.

Any plans to learn Chinese?
Yes, with all my free time. (Laughs.) THR

Mysterious millionaire Gatsby (DiCaprio) parties with Daisy (Mulligan) and Nick (Maguire).

The Great Gatsby

Baz Luhrmann's frenetic anachronisms and use of 3D are at the service of a heartfelt interpretation of the novel

BY TODD MCCARTHY

THE CENTER HOLDS AMID ALL THE RAZZMATAZZ OF Baz Luhrmann's endlessly extravagant screen adaptation of F. Scott Fitzgerald's imperishable The Great Gatsby. As is inevitable with the Australian showman who's never met a scene he didn't think could be improved by more music, costumes, extras and camera tricks, this production begins by being over-the-top and moves on from there. But, given the immoderate lifestyle of the title character, this approach is not exactly inappropriate, even if it is at sharp odds with the refined nature of the author's prose. Although the dramatic challenges posed by the character of narrator Nick Carraway remain problematic, the cast is first-rate, the ambiance and story provide a measure of intoxication and, most important, the core thematic concerns pertaining to the American dream, self-reinvention and love lost, regained and lost again are tenaciously addressed.

At the very least, Luhrmann must be given credit for delivering a real interpretation of the 1925 novel, something not seriously attempted by the previous two big-screen adaptations (there was also a now-lost 1926 silent version). Paramount's 1949 film suffered from threadbare production values and uneven performances, but Alan Ladd was a terrific Gatsby. The same studio's second try, in 1974, felt suffocating; it had the wrong director in Jack Clayton, and Robert Redford was opaque in the title role. A 2000 television adaptation didn't make a significant impression.

For many, the thought of Luhrmann tarting up such a revered classic with 3D, anachronistic Jay Z and Beyonce music, techno-spiced party scenes and Australian locations was sacrilegious, if not criminal. Perhaps even fans of what the director did with William Shakespeare's Romeo + Juliet and Moulin Rouge! might have wondered if he was the right guy to take on the work most often proposed as The Great American Novel.

But no matter how frenzied and sometimes distracting Luhrmann's technique may be, his commitment to the material remains palpable, which makes for a film that, most of the time, feels vibrantly alive while remaining quite faithful to the spirit, if not the letter, of its source.

It begins gently, in patchy black-and-white that turns into a depth-enhancing color 3D frame that gives way to the famous green light at the end of Daisy's pier. After we are introduced to Nick (Tobey Maguire), Luhrmann's cultural collisions and dislocations commence as a synthesis of archival footage and CGI. A lad of modest means trying to find a toehold on Wall Street, Nick was at Yale with rich bruiser Tom Buchanan (Joel Edgerton) and has taken a little house in West Egg, Long Island, right across the bay from Tom and his wife, Daisy (Carey Mulligan), and in the shadow of the mansion owned by the elusive Jay Gatsby. At Gatsby's parties the booze flows and the music plays. But no one ever sees the host, whose wealth is surpassed only by his mysteriousness.

Luhrmann and his ever-essential design collaborator (and co-producer and wife) Catherine Martin always seem extra-stimulated by such scenes, which involve ornate costumes, constant movement and music, which here imposes blends as unlikely as hip-hop and Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue." Whether you can abide some of the musical choices or not, the way Luhrmann and his music editors mix and match is ballsy and impressive.

In time-honored dramatic fashion, Gatsby's entrance is delayed for a half-hour and, when the moment comes, there's something in the way it's shot combined with Leonardo DiCaprio's I-own-the-world smile that recalls the first time you see the young Charles Foster Kane in an earlier film about a fellow with more money than he knows what to do with. This moment shows how classically precise Luhrmann can be when he wants. Throughout, he photographs DiCaprio the way a movie star used to be shot — glamorously and admiringly.

After a number of roles that, however well acted, may not have been quite in his wheelhouse, DiCaprio feels just right as Gatsby; the glamour and allure are at one with his film-star persona.

Viewers will debate whether Mulligan has the beauty and the bearing desired for the part, but she lucidly portrays the desperate tear Daisy feels between her unquestionable love for Gatsby and fear of her husband. Maguire's slightly aging boyishness as Nick becomes tiresome by the film's second half.

As for the use of 3D by Luhrmann and cinematographer Simon Duggan, it is probably the most naturalistic aspect of the film; only rarely do you notice it and yet it really does add something to the experience, drawing you in as if escorting you through a series of opening gates, doors and emotional states.

An Episode in the Life of an Iron Picker

Bosnian Oscar-winner Danis Tanovic adapts a notorious news story into a starkly compelling docudrama

BY STEPHEN DALTON

A case study of poverty and racism on the margins of modern Europe, An Episode in the Life of an Iron Picker combines emotional force with aesthetic severity. After winning an Academy Award for his 2001 debut feature, the war drama No Man's Land, writer-director Danis Tanovic spent much of the past decade in France. But he has now resettled in his native Bosnia-Herzegovina, where he shot this timely docudrama. Iron Picker will not be an easy sell to overseas audiences, but it is a compassionate work with niche appeal to Eastern Bloc glumfest gluttons who find the grim social realism of the Romanian New Wave a little too happy-go-lucky.

The film's slender script mirrors a real incident that became a national scandal in Bosnia, in which a dirt-poor family belonging to the persecuted Roma minority came up against a potentially fatal brick wall of state bureaucracy. Returning from his job foraging for scrap metal, Nazif (Nazif Mujic) finds his pregnant wife, Senada (Senada Alimanovic), in pain. After rushing to the hospital, Senada finds she has miscarried and urgently requires surgery to prevent septicemia. Unable to cover the cost of the operation, Senada and Nazif return home defeated. Their increasingly frantic appeals to penniless relatives, hospital bosses and charities fall on deaf ears. Only by breaking the law can Senada cheat the system and save her own life.

In an inspired coup for cinematic naturalism, Tanovic contacted the real couple at the heart of this story and persuaded them to re-enact their near-death ordeal onscreen. The couple's winningly cute young daughters, Sandra and Semsa, also play themselves. Impressively, so do some of the real doctors involved in the original incident.

Camerawork is hand-held and intimate, with a raw aesthetic that matches the harsh subject matter. At times we could almost be watching a Bosnian remake of Winter's Bone.

Iron Picker is not a comforting watch, and it lacks the editorial context of a more conventional documentary, which might have made it more accessible to viewers outside the Balkans. That said, this is a universal human story at heart, a bleakly compelling family drama with a coldly furious edge of political protest.

BY DAVID ROONEY

Director-actor Kitano (under the alias Beat Takeshi) plays the redoubtable menace Otomo.

Devotees awaiting a return to the brilliantly idiosyncratic form of Takeshi Kitano's best work, like Sonatine and Hana-bi, will have to keep hoping. But the maverick Japanese writer-director-actor known for his vicious set-pieces and macabre sense of humor eventually delivers lip-smacking pleasures in the slow-ignition yakuza thriller Outrage Beyond.

A sequel to 2010's Outrage that picks up where we left off with the powerful Sanno crime clan, the film demands concentration. Kitano doles out reams of yappy exposition in the opening stretch and requires his audience to sift through a complex web of characters across two crime families, the police force and a government ministry. But the film becomes progressively more involving, breaking down volatile power structures, orchestrating crosses and double-crosses, and peppering the talky action with contained bursts of muscular violence and cruel comedy.

Much is made here of the erosion of traditional codes of honor and family loyalty, with disgruntled old-school mobsters being pushed aside for young hedge-fund hot shots. They run the Sanno organization much like a corporate entity, while the alter kockers grumble quietly about such things as meals no longer being served at executive meetings. It's a droll vision of organized crime, and worlds apart from, say, the American, Italian or Russian equivalents.

Leadership of the Sanno has been seized by silver fox Kato (Tomokazu Kiura) and his hot-tempered underboss Ishihara (Ryo Kase), with the old guard forewarned that they need to pull their weight or be cut loose. Detective Kataoka (Fumiyo Kohinata), a manipulative agent on the organized crime beat, heads an effort to chop the Sanno down to size. His strategy is to seed friction within the family, as well as between the Sanno and allied clan the Hanabishi. When Kataoka's tactics fail to achieve the intended result, he steps up the offensive by springing Otomo (Kitano, using his acting alias Beat Takeshi) from prison. A former boss of a small family with ample reason to hate the Sanno, Otomo was last seen being stabbed and left for dead by a scar-faced rival.

Having Otomo back on the scene is bad news especially for barking upstart Ishihara, who has much to fear. When the sharkskin-suited climber inevitably gets his comeuppance, it's in a gloriously comic death by baseball launcher, which is right up there with the most inventive of Kitano's screen kills. That scene accelerates the body count of the film's punchy final third, which makes up for its more effortful opening stretch.

As always, Kitano himself is the most eccentric presence, a playful smile creeping across Otomo's face as he applies a drill to the skull of some hapless pawn. (Though in keeping with this film's unusual restraint, the actual gore is held to a minimum, mostly played offscreen.) Ultimately, Outrage Beyond is too convoluted and slow in cohering to break beyond a small niche internationally, but Kitano cultists will eat it up.

Finding Mr. Right

Leading lady Tang Wei turns up the charm in this Seattle-set Chinese rom-com from director Xue Xiaolu

BY ELIZABETH KERR

Mainland China's thirst for straight-up contemporary comedy has been demonstrated beyond a reasonable doubt if the runaway success of Xue Xiaolu's Finding Mr. Right is any indication. Starring Tang Wei, an actress once banned from Chinese media (the government reportedly objected to both the political message and the nudity in her film Lust, Caution) and riddled with conflicting messages about the state of the nation itself, the romantic comedy about the pregnant mistress of a tycoon packed off to Seattle to have a baby beyond the reach of the scandal sheets does nothing to tinker with the form and holds zero surprises. But its adherence to rom-com convention in an industry top-heavy with historical epics extolling the genius of ancient generals makes Mr. Right stand out among the crowd. Xue's second feature is an exemplar of commercial filmmaking, and production help from a handful of Hong Kong pros gives it the polished finish the fluffy material demands. That polish and fluff helped the film become China's highest-grossing rom-com of all time with a box-office take of 515 million yuan ($83.75 million).

MARKET TITLE

The bratty and bullying Jiajia (Tang) undergoes a personal transformation.

Jiajia (Tang) flies to Seattle (neither the first nor the last reference to Nora Ephron's Sleepless in Seattle) ostensibly as a tourist but in reality she's there to have her married lover's baby. She's greeted at the airport by Frank (Wu Xiubo), a Beijing doctor without a license to practice in the United States, and after some setbacks makes her way to a maternity halfway house. From this point on Mr. Right deals in the rote: The lover lets Jiajia down at Christmas, she gets lonely and turns to fellow Beijinger Frank for company, feelings develop.

Writer-director Xue has proven adept at manipulating emotion for dramatic effect, as she demonstrated in the tearjerking Jet Li vehicle Ocean Heaven, and though there's a great deal more comedy in Mr. Right, she does it again. Xue hits all the marks when she's supposed to: We get irritated by Jiajia's bullying, baffled by her materialism and exasperated by her treatment of Frank — all at preordained points in the narrative. However, Katherine Heigl could take a lesson from Tang in how to win over an audience by sheer force of personality despite serious character flaws. Jiajia is so obnoxious at the story's outset it would be easy to lose viewers by the 30-minute mark, but Xue wisely lets Tang be Tang and keeps us (mostly) invested in her journey.

The Chinese title translates as "Beijing meets Seattle," which in some ways is a better indication of the story's trajectory. At its core the film isn't really about finding Mr. Right; it's about Jiajia's growth as a person. In the end, Finding Mr. Right is as much a dissertation on 21st century social dynamics as Sleepless was.

Fruitvale Station

Ryan Coogler's compelling debut film is based on the 2009 shooting of Oscar Grant by police in Oakland

BY TODD MCCARTHY

The sort of material you might expect in a documentary — the true story of a senseless police shooting that took the life of yet another young urban black man — instead has been made into a powerful feature film in Fruitvale Station. First-time writer-director Ryan Coogler, who, at 26, is the same age his subject would have been today, puts the life of Oscar Grant onscreen with enough conviction to make clear why Grant's killing became the cause for massive protests against police brutality in Oakland. The presence of producers Forest Whitaker and Octavia Spencer ensure attention will be paid, and, though commercial prospects are limited, the film will serve as an effective springboard for the careers of Coogler and lead Michael B. Jordan.

Raw phone video footage at the outset presents but doesn't elucidate what happened in the wee hours of New Year's Day 2009. A few angry young black men are being subdued by cops at the Oakland-area Fruitvale BART station. After some scuffling, what sounds like a shot is heard, though nothing looks to have warranted gunfire.

The film then rewinds to lay out the fabric of 22-year-old Oscar's life. After a youth presumably pockmarked by the usual urban ills of gangs and drugs, Oscar is very much trying to do the right thing by his girlfriend (Melonie Diaz), daughter (Ariana Neal) and mother (Spencer). Digging beneath the surface reveals a more nuanced story that one presumes and hopes has not been sanitized in the cause of a good movie or in return for family cooperation.

Coogler stages the chaos of the subway altercation with breath-shortening frenzy and ambiguity, with the latter providing enough legal wiggle room for the cop to later get off with a light sentence. It's an awful tale, fraught with political, social and moral weight symbolic of numerous contemporary ills, and one with an unshown ugly aftermath of violent protests that further sullied Oakland's reputation.

As Oscar, Jordan at moments gives off vibes of a young Denzel Washington in the way he combines gentleness and toughness; he effortlessly draws the viewer in toward him. Spencer brings her gravitas to the proceedings as his stalwart mother.

Bonjour….and Welcome to the village of Clermont-Soubiran, France.

Located about half way between Bordeaux and Toulouse in Southern France, in the district of Agen. The region is known for their food, wine, skiing and yet is still close to the sea.

Sitting on approximately 2 acres, behind a private electric gate is a magnificent, contemporary chateau known as "Les 2 Lions". This home has 5 bedrooms, 2 offices (could be additional bedrooms), and 6 bathrooms. The master suite is located downstairs and has a large walk-through closet. A modern kitchen allows you to prepare the regions delicious cuisine. The over-sized living room is perfect for large gatherings. In-ground pool with adjacent lovely patio.. A Turkish bath and above ground spa are located in the separate pool house. The sellers have passionately planted and nurtured the breathtaking seasonal gardens. Multi-car garage and much more. Offered at 1,260,000 Euros.

8 Decades of The Hollywood Reporter

The most glamorous and memorable moments from a storied history

Says Rothman of Moulin Rouge! (directed by Luhrmann, pictured with Kidman in 2001): "It was an original, daring film that we wanted to expose to the world scene."

Cannes got a kick out of Baz Luhrmann in 2001

THE 2001 WORLD premiere of Moulin Rouge! began with a troupe of red-plumed dancers doing the can-can to the tune of "Hey Big Spender" — "appropriate," wrote The Hollywood Reporter, as the man footing the bill was in attendance: News Corp. CEO Rupert Murdoch. After the dancing, the film's stars, Ewan McGregor and Nicole Kidman, declared the festival open in French and English. The big musical numbers were greeted by "spontaneous applause," wrote THR. Tom Rothman, then-head of 20th Century Fox, says the idea behind the spectacle was to "bring this movie to Cannes head high and proud. " Though it lost the Palme d'Or to Nanni Moretti's The Son's Room, Moulin Rouge! went on to gross $175 million worldwide. Luhrmann opens Cannes again this year in grand (and 3D) fashion with The Great Gatsby. — BILL HIGGINS

Luhrmann's kaleidoscopic musical seemed to strike the right note between auteur audacity and pop-culture entertainment, setting a tone that this year's festival apparently is striving for. In a rare case, "Moulin Rouge" also is In Competition.

Spontaneous applause greeted some of the big musical numbers during the screening, and the conclusion of the film was met with a warm ovation.

After the screening, guests filed through the Palais to a ritzy dinner for 700 overlooking the slowly turning windmill blades of the illuminated Moulin Rouge mock-up at Cannes' old port. This was later the setting for what promised to be one of this year's hottest party tickets, with U.K. DJ Fatboy Slim booked to spin discs into the night
